The Ames – Webster Mansion, a magnificent brownstone in Boston's Back Bay, symbolizes an elegant interpretation of Second Empire architecture in America. The original design in 1871 was an early work by architects Robert Swain Peabody & John Goddard Stearns . Upon Peabody's return from Europe after completing studies in Architecture in Classical and European architecture, he was commissioned by the prominent Boston family of S. V .R Thayer to design the house on the newly established boulevard of Commonwealth Avenue in Boston

In 1882, the house was enlarged and enhanced with a tower addition and a grand reception hall by architect John Hubbard Sturgis , commissioned by Frederick Lothrop Ames . Under the hand of Sturgis, and guided by the Ames family's fascination with European art and exquisite craftsmanship, the mansion at 306 Dartmouth Street was graced with many exceptional works and details.

First Boston Realty International is proud to represent the new owner of this significant Boston property and looks forward to the future of what this very historical building has to bring.
